Developing Resilient Organizations

May 30 - 31, 2021

Background

COVID-19 has highlighted the inadequacy of crisis management of organizations across various sectors of economy and industry. Why are some organizations more successful in coping with, and responding to, the complexity, volatility and uncertainty of the current business environment? Why do some organizations facing adversity focus on the negative, whilst others successfully seize the opportunity to adapt and change?

Objectives

The Doctoral Workshop aims to bring together doctoral candidates in the Management discipline from across the globe to present and discuss their Doctoral work with renowned senior academicians and explore collaborative support from them for further publication. The major objectives are:

- to identify interesting and pertinent research problems to develop Resilient Organizations across various management disciplines and business functions such as IT, OB/HR, Decision Sciences, Marketing, Economics, Finance, Sustainability, Operations and Supply Chains; ;
- to facilitate exchange of ideas between Doctoral students of selected papers and leading academicians in the respective areas to enable them to improve their research paper for possible publication;
- to promote research collaboration between Indian and International management schools;
- to present Metamorphosis as a potential publication outlet for promising research; and
- to showcase the state of the art in management research for handling crises and recovering firm's business the workshop shall include conceptual, qualitative, empirical or analytical papers.

Focus areas

The workshop will focus on novel contributions in following broad areas relating to observations and expectations from present and future resilient organizations. Original papers on the following indicative topics, but not limited to, are invited

- Resilience in the aftermath of COVID-19
- Resilient workforce as key to resilient organizations
- Psychosocial impact and resilience of organizations
- Resilience with remote work
- Changing landscape of work with ICT
- Financial implications of resilience
- Ensuring operational and supply chain continuity during crisis
- Tiding organizations through business and economy slumps
- Developing resilient sales force
- Brand crises and revamp towards socially responsible consumption

Paper submission guidelines

The workshop is open to Doctoral students in Management who have finished course work and have started with research in their respective area. We encourage Indian as well as foreign scholars to submit their work to get dedicated feedback from top researchers in their field. Based on the presentations and follow-up discussion the PhD scholars can look for possible collaborations for publications and future development of their research work.

Paper submission guidelines

Subject to the COVID-19 situation around that time, participants may be invited to the campus for a face to face discussion with the faculty; the international review panel would, however, be only available for consultation in the online mode.

PhD candidates are required to submit:

1. A latest copy of their CV
2. A letter from Thesis Advisor mentioning status of Thesis (only for those in the advanced stages of their thesis work)
3. An extended abstract (minimum 2500 words) based on APA guidelines. The font type should be Times New Roman 12- font size, 1.5-line space, and 1-inch (2.5 cm) margin all around

The extended abstract should give an outline of the research problem and its significance, research objectives, a brief summary of the literature review and the research gap, along with the methodology, and expected contributions to theory and practice, preliminary findings (if applicable), and key references.

Note: This is an exclusive conference committed to support high level Doctoral work. We look forward to select around 10-12 abstracts that follow academic rigor and benefit from the expertise of our renowned panel members

IIM Lucknow is pleased to present the 'BEST CONCEPT AWARD' to the most innovative Doctoral work on the theme

Publication process

Participants will view the publication process together with experienced and renowned scholars in order to learn from cases of success and failure in formulating, writing, submitting, and revising papers for top-journal publication.
